If DirecTv is already airing RFD TV, I fail to comprehend why AT&T would not want to continue airing this extremely important network. I live in a very rural area, with much of the working environment being in farming and agriculture. RFDTV offers such tremendous programming, not only for farming and agriculture, but for other decent family entertainment. There are more than enough other networks that air reality tv, crime shows, sex and violence. What RFDTV offers is far more educating and entertaining than mainstream networks. Television viewing should have more possibilities like RFDTV, the Hallmark channel and the Family channel. Anyone with a conscience and a sense of decency would see the importance and necessity of continuing to air the RFD TV network. Farming and agriculture is the center of this country's welfare. I personally do not want to receive meat and dairy products from overseas. Here we have this great tv network that continues to educate farmers and their children and grandchildren to continue this very necessary staple of our livelihood. To hear the arrogance of Comcast executives insist they are more of an urban supplier is just unconscionable. If they don't want to satisfy ALL subscribers, then don't buy in a rural area. RFDTV should, by every account, remain in all the households it is currently in, plus be allowed to expand to ANY and EVERY household that wants to view their fantastic programming. If a company wants to merge with another company, it should be with the understanding that the tv channels that were there as free viewing channels, should remain as free viewing channels, and not be removed.
