

60000975151.txt

I am wholeheartedly against the desolution of net neutrality. There is no logical reason for internet service providers to charge for both carrying information and for the information carried through them to be downloaded by their customers. All information should be carried and have the ability to be downloaded at the same speeds without paying a premium to internet service providers. To end net neutrality is akin to charging for free speech, something that should never be done in a country that holds such an ideal so close to its national image.