

60000976301.txt

Net neutrality is something that must be preserved. The internet has been a longstanding universally accepted database where companies couldn't hold up a (metaphorical) gun and say "pay us more or you're going to be unable to access the (supposedly) free online data". While I know there would simply be lower speeds, that's more saying "you won't die (again, metaphorically), you'll just be paralyzed for the rest of your life until you pay us more".