Net neutrality is something that needs to stay. Eliminating or providing clauses where large corporations can avoid providing sufficient bandwidth for companies that do not pay will stunt the creativity of this nation. In extreme cases this could lead to an even larger education gap between minorities and the privileged (limiting searching and publishing of low cost educational videos etc.). The internet is something that is free for everyone to access. It must stay that way for this country to continue to grow and succeed.

We cannot trust the internet providers to do the best for the American people when given the opportunity to profit.

Sincerely,

An educated citizen (who also knows how tricky the internet companies can be when trying to get your extra 20 bucks a month)
