

60000985250.txt

I would like to voice my support for a plan to keep digital access speeds the same for all content suppliers online, or the plan referred to as net neutrality. In a country where money spent lobbying our congressional reps can be correlated with returns through government contracts, creating a fast lane internet smacks of the same kind of stripping of entire demographics of people's voices from the public dialogue. By reading the paper, it is obvious that a large group of Americans sees through the net neutrality conversation as a way for certain internet service providers to leverage monopolistic power over their industry. Even if the FCC rules it legal to create a two tiered system of digital access speeds and further if a court supports this claim, it is obviously not in the interest of the general population of the United States. Please respect the people and keep the internet a pavilion of equal rights where any citizen could start a company and receive the same data transfer speeds as a large monopolistic ISP, such as Time Warner and Comcast. Without that guarantee, the people of the US will be embarrassed on the world stage as obvious 2nd class citizens to those who profit from their monopolistic enterprise. Judges, FCC commission, congress people, please make those hard judgements you were hired to make: all is permissible but not all is prudent or beneficial. Thank you.