I'm glad that this was brought to my attention. I didn't realize that location discovery for cell phone users who are in trouble had become so reduced for emergency response personnel. Upon reviewing the information provided, I believe that the FCC's proposal will address this situation much better than the alternative roadmap proposal. I especially don't feel comfortable with the idea of depending upon GLONASS, the Russian military satellite system, and regarding using Bluetooth/Wi-fi system; that may work wonderfully, but until extensive and complete testing can be done, I agree that the known system should be used for the time being.
