Dear Chairman Wheeler,

A cynical citizen may say that your work as a lobbyist for the cable and wireless industry indicates that you obviously will bow to their demands and allow them to chip away at net neutrality. Ever the optimistic American, I am writing with the hope you will do the right thing for the freedoms of speech and expression that we still cherish. A wise man once said, "I am committed to maintaining our networks as engines for economic growth, test beds for innovative services and products, and channels for all forms of speech protected by the First Amendment." If that man were you, he would follow up that statement by classifying ISPs as "common carriers" so that the Open Internet is not encroached upon by the greed and shortsightedness of one industry. Thank you.
