Should Marriott be allowed to interfere with Part 15 services in this instance, it is highly likely that this will set precedent for interference with other Part 15 services - and while the creation of a market niche for corporate electronic countermeasures might provide stimulus for the economy, it is bound to result in significant complaints by the neighbors of organizations taking advantage of these types of countermeasures. Looking at the consequences of such, it is highly likely that wireless services in these bands will become largely unusable to consumers in many areas due to competing attempts to 'jam' "unauthorized" access points. This is a less than useful result, and one which will assuredly impact the other users of said bands very negatively.
