I would like to see anything reasonable and legal done to prevent telemarketing calls. I receive many of these, and report most of them to the Do Not Call list (sometimes I just get tired of reporting them and skip a few.)

I receive them on both my Verizon copper landline, which does not have the technology to allow Nomorobo to work, and my Consumer Cellular cell phone, which is a basic flip phone without the technology to support apps that block calls. Of course, the cell phone calls are not only annoying, they cost me money.

Below is a list of the calls I received in October on the landline. The cell phone is new, and the calls on that have all come from one number, 866-944-2900 a "fake award scam".
