this wont be brief. i live and work in a small community as a systems admin. we have just 2 choices for internet services. satellite, or a company named centurylink. at our main location, 17 miles east, we have maybe 4. AT&t, who why pay an extreme amount a month just for a simple 25 meg connection to allow good traffic through out our government buildings and our outlaying locations. here at our office in effingham, best we can get is a 10 meg from centurylink. this about this. we are a STATE BUSINESS. a court house for crying out loud, police department, a CITY. and they best we can do is a 25 meg connection for 1600 dollars a month???? something needs done about this. the service providers need to understand that just because they think that 90% of the population doesn't need anything faster than a 10 meg connection, doesn't mean those that do should be limited to it. they also should have no control over what i do with it, if i pay them for a service, that is that. that's like saying "oh you pay me for water, but you can only use it to spray off your sidewalk, no showering!" think about how stupid that sounds. that's basically what is going on here. if i choose to use netflix they have to pay you for their streaming services to work properly? they shouldn't be allowed to throttle whatever they want, whenever they want, just because they want more money for you to use that service.
