Even in a medium sized town, I can access the internet at home through at least 5 different companies. I've never had trouble reaching an internet site I wished to see. Therefore, I fail to see any need to regulate the existing internet services as a "public utility." IIIs I can see coming from this include 1) a later move to regulate rates thereby strangling innovation and access and 2) sending a signal to less free countries to further choke their own internet services. I strongly oppose this proposed regulation.
