Please leave the internet alone. The internet is a place where many who feel alone go to vent their sorrows, to meet people like them that have gone through what they are going through right now. When I was first diagnosed with dyslexia I had no clue what it was, what it meant to how I would learn things. The internet helped, I would go on Google and look up ways for dyslexic people to learn, or how to read and write correctly with dyslexia. I helped ALOT. Now, I know the internet isn't always a place of sunshine and rainbows and all that magical stuff, but would this upcoming bill allow whoever runs those websites to pay the cable providers just the same as any other website could? Think about that. Money is money and honestly that's all the cable companies care about and isn't that business works? You give me money and I provide a service or good? So what stopping the people from malicious websites from paying? We are a capitalist society after all...
