

Government regulation is not the answer to any and every problem that Americans face. If there is a problem, allow the system that has been in place for decades to solve it. Just look at our healthcare system? Is it better now than it was 6 years ago? Definitely not.

Such it is with government regulation of the Internet. The government believes it has all the answers; in effect, it creates the problems then ostensibly solves them with expanded control and regulations, more taxes, and, more importantly, the denial of our freedom. We cannot allow more regulation without proper oversight.

For many years, the Internet has been efficient without government oversight. Further, most people do not realize the scope of government intervention; some believe they will get more "free" stuff from the government. The Congress is purposefully left out of these proceedings (just like the myriad Executive Orders emanating from the presidential pen). Every American has a right to know what is transpiring with regard to the supposed "open" Internet proceedings; the 'open' Internet proceedings are 'closed' to both Americans AND the Congress.

Every American (with common sense) must have grave concerns about our constitutional rights, and how they are being eroded. With the full support of those he hired, President Obama has transformed America into something most people do not recognize. In his campaign, he stated myriad times that his administration would be the most TRANS-parent. Do the commissioners believe this to be true? If so, they will recognize their responsibilities and act upon them.

Free speech is guaranteed to every American under the First Amendment, and clandestine actions make a mockery of every American and the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution. I urge every Commissioner to contemplate his/her actions very seriously before inflicting the careless and reckless denial of our Freedom of Speech.
