

60001038438.txt

The Internet should be an open medium allowing for equal competition between businesses. Introducing a tiered system where businesses can purchase faster access to their customer base not only introduces a barrier to innovation as burgeoning innovators do not have the deep pockets that established businesses have, but it also is a clear move towards increasing the control and profits of cable providers who already have near monopolistic control over their service areas.

This is an opportunity for the FCC to take a stand against a humongous lobbying effort aimed at increasing profits at the cost of future innovation. Make the correct choice that protects future generations and preserves the very thing that makes the Internet such an indispensable medium: preserve net neutrality.