SUMMARY

United Services, Inc. and Co-Mo Comm, Inc. are seeking full Commission review of the Order by the Wireline Competition Bureau, which denied their CAF Phase II challenges of certain census blocks in Missouri where they provide voice and broadband services. The Commission should reverse the decision by the Bureau to deny their challenges, because the Bureau erred as a matter of fact and policy.

United and Co-Mo both provide voice and broadband services to these census blocks which meet the Commission's requirements. While CenturyLink opposed these challenges, and claimed that Co-Mo does not provide voice services, the reality is that Co-Mo and United do provide voice services that meet the Commission's requirements. Similarly, CenturyLink claimed that United does not provide service to any current or former customers in the census blocks, but that is also untrue and evidence was submitted by United to show that it did have current or former customers in the census blocks. As such, the Bureau may have erred as a matter of fact, if it based its decision on the arguments by CenturyLink that Co-Mo and United did not provide voice and broadband services to current or former customers in these census blocks.

The Bureau's decision allows CenturyLink to use funding from the Connect America Fund to overbuild in areas that are currently served with voice and broadband by Co-Mo Connect and United, contrary to the Commission's Rules and public policies. Thus, the Bureau erred as a matter of policy, and the Commission should reverse the Bureau in order to preserve funding that could be used efficiently and effectively in other areas that are truly unserved with voice and broadband services.

APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

Co-Mo Comm, Inc. (“Co-Mo”) and United Services, Inc. (“United”) pursuant to Section 1.115 of the Commission’s Rules hereby seek full Commission review of the Order by the Wireline Competition Bureau (“Bureau”) in so far as it denied the challenges by Co-Mo and United that certain census blocks in Missouri are served.¹ This decision allows CenturyLink to use funding from the Connect America Fund (“CAF”) to overbuild in areas that are currently served with voice and broadband by Co-Mo Connect and United, contrary to the Commission’s Rules and public policies. The Commission should reverse the Order and direct the Bureau to designate these census blocks as served with voice and broadband services by Co-Mo Connect and United. This Application for Review presents the following questions to the Commission: whether the Bureau erred as a matter of fact in denying the challenges by Co-Mo and United that the census blocks are served, and whether the Bureau erred as a matter of policy in enabling CenturyLink to access CAF funding to provide broadband and voice in areas that are already served by Co-Mo and United.

I. Introduction and Background.

United Services is a wholly owned subsidiary of United Electric Cooperative, Inc., which is a 501(c)12 not-for-profit serving approximately 9,800 meters throughout the rural areas of Northwest

¹ Connect America Fund, Order, WC Docket No. 10-90 and WC Docket No. 14-83, DA 15-383 (Wireline Competition Bureau, Mar. 30, 2015)(hereinafter “Challenge Order”).

Missouri and Southwest Iowa and a density of less than 3 customers per mile. United has provided electric service to our region for over 75 years. In late 2010, United Electric was awarded a $21 million grant/loan through USDA to build a 1200 mile Fiber-to-the-Home (FTTH) network throughout a portion of our electric service area. In December 2013, United completed construction of this advanced FTTH network, and is now providing world class internet, voice, and video services to a region that was 89% unserved or underserved prior to this project becoming a reality. In addition to our original project, United is actively connecting anchor institutions and businesses in and around our funded project area to provide our rural communities a chance to vastly improve opportunities in education, health care, public safety, economic development and overall quality of life in an area largely left behind by our incumbent carriers.

Co-Mo Comm, Inc. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Co-Mo Electric Cooperative, which was founded in 1939 to provide electric service to members who were unserved. Seventy-two years to the actual day that the first cooperative member was connected with electric service, Co-Mo Comm lit its first fiber optic served broadband customer as part of its new Co-Mo Connect network. We are now actively deploying FTTH technology across our 2,300 square mile service territory in Central Missouri. Our cooperative believes next-generation broadband is critical to the viability of our region. This belief is backed by our actions starting in 2011 to begin the process of constructing a state-of-the-art fiber-to-the-home communication network capable of delivering gigabit speeds to the cooperative members and provide electric-grid communication for improved electric service.

Co-Mo and United both timely filed challenges to show that they were serving certain census blocks in Missouri that appeared on the initial eligible list and should be removed because these census blocks were already served.² Specifically, Co-Mo challenged 551 census blocks as served, and United challenged 472 census blocks as served. In their challenges, Co-Mo and United met the FCC's requirements that 1) the provider must actually be offering voice and broadband service in the census block; 2) the provider must have voice and broadband-capable physical assets (wireline or wireless) in or adjacent to the census block at issue; and 3) the provider must already have customers in that census block, or previously had customers in that census block.³

² See Connect America Fund Challenge of Co-Mo Comm, WC Docket No: 14-93 (filed Aug. 14, 2014)(hereinafter, "Co-Mo Challenge"); and Connect America Fund Challenge of United Services, Inc., WC Docket No. 14-93 (filed Aug. 14, 2014)(hereinafter "United Challenge").

CenturyLink replied to the challenges by Co-Mo and United.⁴ In its reply, CenturyLink claimed that Co-Mo had provided, “[n]o proof that Co-Mo Connect is a provider of voice service” and that Co-Mo had provided “[n]o proof of a current or former customer in each challenged census block.”⁵ Similarly, it claimed that United had provided, “[n]o proof of meeting the pricing requirement,” and that United had provided “[i]nsufficient proof of a current or former customer in each challenged census block.”

The Bureau issued its Challenge Order, denying the challenges by Co-Mo and United.⁶ The Bureau found that United had not produced enough evidence to show that it was serving those census blocks where CenturyLink had contested United’s challenges. The Bureau also found that the census blocks challenged by Co-Mo and contested by CenturyLink were unserved, because the “supporting documentation did not show the respondent [i.e. in this case, Co-Mo] met all of the service requirements, ³ The FCC issued a Public Notice in which it addressed waivers in relation to 4,224 census blocks that asked the Wireline Competition Bureau to waive the requirement that a census block have a current or former customer in order to be considered served. See Replies Sought in Connect America Phase II Challenge Process, WC Docket Nos. 10-90, 14-93, Public Notice, 29 FCC Rcd 11497, 11497-501 (Wireline Comp. Bur. 2014) (Prima Facie Public Notice). In that Public Notice, the Bureau included United among those who requested waivers of this requirement, and it denied a waiver to United because “the petition did not include evidence of special circumstances justifying a waiver”). However, United did not request a waiver of this requirement in its petition. Instead, United simply sought confidential treatment of certain information submitted as part of its petition. United stated in its petition that “United Services has recently started providing fiber to the home services as indicated on the attached network map,” and that “[t]he bulk of our customers have activated within the last 12 months and we are growing rapidly.” Further, United “indicated on the map the census blocks [where] we have the fiber network available with active customers (green) and census blocks where the fiber network is available without active customers (red).” The vast majority of the census blocks on the map indicate that there are active customers. Moreover, the Commission has clarified that it is sufficient that a census block could be served – where, as here -- by a provider in an adjacent census block. Thus, United has not requested a waiver of the requirement that it show that it is providing service to customers in the census blocks that it is challenging, and in fact, it has met its burden to show that the census blocks that it is challenging are currently served with broadband, as more fully described herein.

and the declaration did not specifically address all of the service requirements.”⁷

It appears that the Bureau agreed with the arguments made by CenturyLink against the challenges by Co-Mo and United, given that Co-Mo and United prevailed in their challenges in every other census block other than those involving CenturyLink, whether the challenges were contested or not. As more fully described below, Co-Mo and United submit that the Bureau erred as a matter of fact and policy, because it appears to have agreed with arguments by CenturyLink that mischaracterize the voice services provided by Co-Mo as a matter of fact and policy. In addition, the Bureau erred if it agreed with allegations by CenturyLink that are erroneous as a matter of fact concerning whether Co-Mo and United did in fact “serve” customers in those census blocks.

II. Co-Mo and United Provide Voice and Broadband Services That Meet the Commission’s Requirements.

A. Overview

Contrary to CenturyLink, Co-Mo and United do provide voice and broadband that meets the Commission’s requirements for an area to be considered “served” for purposes of eligibility to receive CAF Phase II funding. Co-Mo and United both provide voice services to their customers through a partnership with Big River Telephone Company, as more fully described below. Also contrary to CenturyLink, they both provide broadband service that is reasonably comparable to broadband services that are offered in urban areas, as more fully described below.

1. Commission Requirements for Voice Services.

Although the Commission’s Rules require an entity to provide “residential terrestrial fixed voice and broadband service” in order to be deemed an unsubsidized competitor and the Bureau has interpreted the Commission’s definition of “voice” as requiring the provider itself to provide voice service in order to be designated an unsubsidized competitor; the Bureau has clarified that “a broadband provider that provides voice using a managed voice solution obtained from a third party vendor would be considered to be providing voice service, so long as the broadband provider is the entity responsible for dealing with any customer problems, and it provides quality of service guarantees to end user customers.” The Bureau has more recently provided additional guidance regarding whether a provider is “offering” voice and broadband, and it has stated it would make a determination based upon whether the provider “holds itself out to the public as able and willing to provide voice and broadband to a given location... [and] will examine this question from the point of view of the consumer: whether a consumer, examining the information available to her, would reasonably believe that she could order voice and broadband service from the provider at her address.”⁸ Furthermore, the Bureau noted that it would look to whether service is advertised by the provider on its website or by other means.⁹

⁷ Id. at ¶43 (stating, “[i]n those cases where the supporting documentation did not show the respondent met all of the service requirements, and the declaration did not specifically address all of the service requirements, however, the census block was marked unserved,” and explaining that “[w]e concluded such blocks should be treated as unserved based on the totality of the circumstances, weighing both the evidence presented in the initial challenge as well as the specificity of the evidence submitted on reply.”)

2. Commission Requirements for Broadband Services.

In order to qualify as “served” by an unsubsidized competitor, a census block must have broadband service as well as voice with pricing that is reasonably comparable to pricing for similar services in an urban area.¹⁰ As the Bureau stated in the Phase II Challenge Process Guidance Public Notice, a census block will be considered “served” if a provider can show three elements: (1) the provider actually offers voice and broadband service in the census block, (2) the provider has physical assets in or adjacent to the census block, and (3) the provider currently has or previously had voice or broadband customers in the census block.¹¹ In addition, the broadband service must have, at a minimum, speeds of 4 Mbps downstream and 1 Mbps upstream, a usage allowance of at least 100 GB, and latency of 100 ms or less.

3. Voice and Broadband Services Provided by Co-Mo and United Meet the Commission's Requirements.

As described in detail below, even though Co-Mo and United partner with Big River Telephone to provide voice services, they meet the Commission's requirements because they act as the customer face for these voice services, such that they are responsible for dealing with any customer problems and they provide quality of service guarantees to end user customers. Finally, they advertise these voice services on their websites.

In addition, Co-Mo and United both provide broadband services that are reasonably comparable to broadband services that are offered in urban areas. United's digital voice package is priced below $46.96 and it offers a broadband service providing 30/30 mbps speeds that is priced below the Commission's interim benchmark of $60.¹² Co-Mo's voice services are also offered at prices below $46.96 and Co-Mo offers symmetrical broadband speeds of 250/250 mbps for less than $60 a month, as well as other less expensive service offerings for as little as $39.95 a month.¹³ Both Co-Mo and United both attested in their petitions that the service quality and prices of their voice and broadband services were reasonably comparable to those in urban areas and that they met the Commission's requirements of a 1 GB usage allowance and latency of less than 100 ms.¹⁴

¹² United offers unlimited digital phone service for $38.95 a month and 15/10 mbps broadband Internet for $39.95 a month. It also offers a 30/30 mbps package for $49.95. See <http://unitedfiber.com/digitalphone/> and <http://unitedfiber.com/internet/>.

¹⁴ See Co-Mo Challenge at 1 (stating "Broadband service is available at up to 1 gigabit with full symmetrical service at less than $100 per month. 5mbps symmetrical service is available at $39.95 per month and 35mbps symmetrical service at $49.95. Residential phone service is also offered at $39.95 per month with unlimited long distance. Both services are offered at prices comparable to urban areas. When bundled, both rates are significantly less. Co-Mo certifies that it does not have any download or upload caps and that the latency on the all fiber network easily falls under 100ms latency.") and see United Challenge at 1 (stating "Our latency is significantly less than 100 ms, we have not imposed data caps, and our prices are reasonably comparable to services in urban areas.")

B. Century Link’s allegations against Co-Mo’s voice services are wrong.

In its petition, Co-Mo attached an affidavit by Randy Klindt, General Manager and Vice President of Operations, Co-Mo Comm, Inc., which explained that Co-Mo Comm "provides broadband and voice service through its phone partner Big River Telephone in the 785 census blocks included in the attached FCC form 505," including the 551 census blocks in which CenturyLink contests Co-Mo’s challenge. In its reply, CenturyLink “suggests” that Co-Mo is simply reselling an over-the-top VoIP service provided by Big River Telephone.¹⁵ However, Co-Mo is not simply reselling voice services from Big River Telephone, as described in detail below. Instead, Co-Mo’s voice services meet the FCC’s requirements because, it “provides voice using a managed voice solution obtained from a third party vendor [i.e. Big River Telephone], [it] is the entity responsible for dealing with any customer problems, and it provides quality of service guarantees to end user customers.”¹⁶

Specifically, Co-Mo markets and sells its voice service as part of its overall service offerings independent from any other entity. Moreover, Co-Mo packages the voice service in with Co-Mo’s High-Speed Internet and Video services. Co-Mo collects all requisite information from the customer and compiles a service order to deliver the service the customer desires. Co-Mo, at its discretion, will solicit customers using any marketing/sales techniques it so desires, including but not limited to: door-to-door sales, inbound and outbound call center activity, customer events, direct mail solicitations, Internet advertising, and other means which Co-Mo deems appropriate.

Co-Mo installs the service at the customer’s location to ensure the service is operational and in good working order. Co-Mo schedules the installation with the Customer, and as part of the installation, ¹⁵ CenturyLink Reply at 30.

¹⁶ CAF Phase II Guidance Public Notice at ¶9, n. 21 (stating that “A broadband provider, such as a cable operator, that provides voice through an affiliated competitive local exchange company would be considered to be providing voice service. Likewise, a broadband provider that provides voice using a managed voice solution obtained from a third party vendor would be considered to be providing voice service, so long as the broadband provider is the entity responsible for dealing with any customer problems, and it provides quality of service guarantees to end user customers. In contrast, if a provider simply resells an over-the-top VoIP product without taking steps to establish quality of service for that product or making quality of service guarantees to end user customers, we would have concerns that such a provider is not providing voice service in a fashion contemplated by the Commission when it decided not to provide funding in areas served by unsubsidized competitors.”)

deploys a device to enable the voice services at Co-Mo's expense. Co-Mo manages its network such that the service is delivered to assured quality of service standards. Moreover, Co-Mo does not simply rely on "over-the-top" Internet connections to deliver its voice service but does so over managed connections to the Customer and to the PSTN, and this monitoring is performed on a 24 hour basis to ensure performance of the service.

Any customer service problems are handled by Co-Mo, which dispatches a technician at its expense to clear any network issues that might be causing issues with the voice services that it is delivering to the customer. Similarly, Co-Mo will notify customers of any planned network issues that might be causing issues with the voice services it is delivering to the customer, and it will notify customers of any planned network upgrades or maintenance activity that might affect its voice services. Finally, after the sale, Co-Mo renders an invoice for the voice services along with other services the customer receives, and it collects payments for the voice services provided and deals with any issues with billing and collection of billed amounts.

C. CenturyLink's allegations against United's broadband services are wrong.

In its petition, United certifies that it is currently providing data, voice, and video services in the challenged census blocks, and that the broadband services that are offered also meet the Commission's requirements, including reasonably comparable prices.¹⁷ CenturyLink claimed that United's challenge should be denied because it did not provide pricing for its own services or those in urban areas, however the Commission does not require that challenges be supported by specific pricing information. Instead, the Commission has repeatedly stated that a statement from a person with knowledge of the facts is sufficient to fulfill the requirement that challenges be supported by evidence.¹⁸ Moreover, the pricing information was readily accessible from United's website, and it shows that the prices of both voice and broadband

¹⁷ United Challenge at 1 (stating that "We are currently providing data, voice, and video services in these areas with broadband speeds from 15 Mbs symmetrical to 100 Mbs symmetrical, and plan to roll out Gigabit services in the next 60 days," adding that "[o]ur latency is significantly less than 100 ms, we have not imposed data caps, and our prices are reasonably comparable to services in urban areas.")

¹⁸ CAF Phase II Challenge Guidance Public Notice at ¶13, citing Connect America Fund, WC Docket No. 10-90, Order, 29 FCC Rcd 181, 184-85 ¶¶ 10-12 (Wireline Comp. Bur. 2014) (Phase I Challenge Resolution Order)

Internet services are reasonably comparable to the prices of voice and broadband in urban areas. Therefore, as a factual matter, CenturyLink's allegations against United's broadband services are wrong and should be rejected by the Commission upon review.

There are also larger policy reasons for the Commission to reject these arguments. It is a fundamental rule that funding should not be provided in areas that are already served, so that funds are allocated wisely and efficiently to areas that are unserved. United timely filed its petition in order to ensure that the Commission would be made aware that it did in fact serve the census blocks in question. Moreover, it met its evidentiary burden by certifying to the basic requirements of services that it provided in these census blocks.

As a matter of policy, the Commission has stated that "any terrestrial, fixed provider shown on the National Broadband Map as offering broadband with speeds of 3 Mbps/768 kbps will be presumed to provide broadband service meeting the speed requirement of 4 Mbps/1 Mbps," and that "[i]t serves the public interest to presume that existing providers that meet the speed criteria also meet the non-speed criteria for broadband service."¹⁹ The National Broadband Map shows that United Electric Cooperative, the parent of United Services does provide broadband services to the census blocks that were the subject of the petition by United Services. As such, the Commission should presume that United does provide reasonably comparable broadband services to those offered in urban areas, as required by the Commission's Rules. Moreover, it should grant United's petition in order to prevent CenturyLink from overbuilding in its service territory – which is contrary to the Commission's fundamental policies against providing funding in areas that are already served.

III. Co-Mo and United Are Providing Service to Customers in the Challenged Census Blocks.

Contrary to CenturyLink, Co-Mo and United are providing service to customers in the challenged census blocks, and Co-Mo and United have provided herein a list at Attachment A and Attachment B, which shows the number of customers they serve and the fiber they have deployed in each census block.

¹⁹ CAF Phase II Challenge Guidance Public Notice at ¶¶6,8.

In its petition, Co-Mo stated that, “Co-Mo Connect and its parent company Co-Mo Electric are actively building approximately 100 miles of fiber to the home network each month,” and it added that “Co-Mo has active fiber to the home plant and service available in all of the census blocks filed in form 505 and is gathering additional subscribers in each of these areas every day.”²⁰ It also attached a map showing the census blocks in which it provided service.

Likewise, United had attached a map with its petition, and it explained in its petition that the map indicated the census blocks where it had deployed fiber and had active customers, as well as where it had deployed fiber but did not have active customers. It also explained in its petition that as part of its FCC Form 505 that it had marked those census blocks in which it had current customers by writing “currently serving” those census blocks in the additional comment section of the form. In addition, it explained that it had also marked those census blocks where it had deployed fiber, but did not have any current customers by writing “fiber available” in the additional comments section of the form. Finally, United stated that it anticipated that it would soon be serving customers in those areas where it had deployed, “as we are adding new customers quickly.”²¹

The Commission has specifically rejected CenturyLink’s argument that a broadband provider must provide the address of the customers that it serves in a census block. Instead, the Commission has advised “participants in the challenge process [to] consider alternatives to submitting competitively sensitive information or information implicating customer privacy,” and it has specifically stated in this context that “an officer may provide a factual statement that a number of customers are currently being served in the relevant census block without providing any identifying information relating to the customers.”²² Moreover, the Commission has previously rejected the argument that providers should be required to show that they have a customer in the challenged census block. In its Phase I Challenge Resolution Order, the ²¹ United Challenge at 1.

²⁰ Co-Mo Challenge at 1.

²² CAF Phase II Challenge Guidance Public Notice at ¶20.

Bureau stated that the Commission did not specifically require ... that a provider actually have customers in a particular census block in order to preclude eligibility for funding. Rather, the Commission spoke in terms of whether an area ‘lacks Internet access’ of a particular speed.”²³ Therefore, the Commission should reject CenturyLink’s arguments here that the challenges by Co-Mo and United should be “denied for failure to meet the Bureau’s customer evidentiary requirement.”²⁴

²³ Phase I Challenge Resolution Order, at ¶17. See also Id. at ¶19 (“We are not persuaded by the argument that the Bureau should not consider any challenge that does not include customer location-specific information, such as actual customer addresses or bills from customers.”)

²⁴ CenturyLink Reply at 30. See also Id. at 57 (stating that “because United has not provided a customer bill that reflects voice or broadband service for an address in each challenged census block, CenturyLink submits that United has failed to demonstrate that it has a current or former customer in each challenged census block.”).

CONCLUSION

Full Commission review of the Bureau's decision to deny the challenges by Co-Mo and United should be provided expeditiously, and the Commission should reverse the Bureau's decision because the decision appears to be based upon CenturyLink's material misstatements of fact and Commission policy, which if left to stand would result in the overbuilding of existing broadband services by CenturyLink in those areas where it received funding – contrary to Commission policy against providing funding in areas that are already served.
