It is important to keep the internet free from corporate interference. The telecommunications companies should not be able to regulate the internet for several reasons, which I will put here.

- 1: The telecommunications companies have proven many times that they care about profit more than their customers, which is evident in outrageously high prices for an inferior product, and the lobby that has kept Net Neutrality from passing
- 2: In a representative government, the government should try to follow the majority, unless it violates another's rights
- 3: If the internet is regulated, then the entire point of the internet is destroyed. The internet is a highway of information, and if someone has the ability to regulate that they control the internet in all of its forms, much like a toll booth on the single lane highway of the internet.
- 4: It could lead to the censoring of the internet, which violates many people's free speech.
