I think that you are on the right track with fining AT&T. But, you need to be fair across the board with all the carriers that offered, and still offer "unlimited" plans that throttle back service at a certain amount. Tracfone is the worst since they advertise 4G speeds but only allow the speed to go no faster than 3MBPS and when you reach their 3 to 5 GB "limit," you are throttled back even more to 64kbps. And everyone knows that you cannot even send a multi-media text at that speed. Also, in Tracfone's "unlimited" plan with Straight Talk and Net 10, many customers are not allowed to send or receive picture texts. I know this because I used to be a Straight Talk customer as well as many of my friends and family. To me and many other consumers, that is NOT unlimited either. Sprint and Verizon, as well as many other local carriers all do the same thing. So if you do not want to look like you are just picking on one carrier, I think that you really need to look at all carriers and delve out the same fines to them.
