It is my hope as a citizen and resident of a rural area of New Hampshire - that the FCC will consider further efforts to enhance access to High Speed Broadband internet in underserved and non served areas of the country

I live in a relatively mid level access area to broadband internet - but I ONLY have access through Satellite Service Providers (there is NO wired access in my area (which is within 20 miles of very highly served areas such as Hanover NH (Dartmouth College etc)

So often the FCC and the Executive (White House) concentrate their emphasis on already well-served areas of URBAN US - to the exclusion of Rural areas - even in States that claim to have multiple service providers
