

60001118946.txt

The new Open Internet policies state that internet providers are no longer allowed to block, throttle, or give paid prioritization to web traffic. I believe, however, that providers are using another method to hurt Net Neutrality. This comes in the form of bandwidth/data caps. The harmful effects of data caps were grossly overlooked when these new policies were being discussed, and I implore the FCC to start taking a stance against this practice.