Growing up in the sixties, when you bought a television or radio, there was no more to pay. The waves are in the air and the advertisers paid for our use. How can that not be enough anymore? We now need an HD TV to pick up a signal, but then that's not enough. Cable and satellite companies charge exhorbanant prices and there are still commercials! Internet providers are charging plenty...even if you're in an area that can barely hold a signal. I say we should have nationwide internet communications and telecommunications for FREE! No? Well let's regulate them so that even if you are disabled and on a fixed income, like myself, you can still afford to get news and be able to communicate.
