

60001323982.txt

I have already made a comment, but after reading some of the other filings I felt compelled to write another. Charter has proposed to offer a plan for low income households. That is a nice concept, but what about us middle class people who struggle enough as it is and do not want to pay any more for the internet? Charter will more than make up for the cost of giving the internet away to some lower income folks with expensive bills for the rest of us. Time Warner's Everyday Low Price plan is low cost and everyone qualifies regardless of social-economic status.

I also have grave concerns about allowing these two large companies to merge. I do not support forming companies that are too big to fail and those with near monopoly status. I wish there were more options for internet, not less.