Dear FCC,

My name is Reyes A. Maraboto and I live in brownsville, TX.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I want to be able to update my own wireless software?not rely on slow manufacturers shipping updates.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

I like to listen to this podcast called drunk ex-pastors, where there two guys have friendly discussions about religion and life, among other things. In every episode, they always advertise their need for donations in order to keep the show going. They are able to survive while competing with larger, better funded podcasts because they can keep their production costs very low. if there were no Net Neutrality, these gentlemen, and others like them, would have no chance at competing against huge production companies, and they would slowly die out. The end of Net Neutrality would be the death of internet innovation.

Sincerely,

Reyes A. Maraboto
