Dear FCC,

My name is edgar and I live in fontana, CA.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

The regulation of software limits creative innovation and sets barriers for smaller investors which breeds big cooperations. This short hands anyone without the same access as big businesses. This is still America right?

Sincerely,

edgar
