For too long, cable companies like Cox and Time Warner, in our area, are monopolies that control the TV wires. Airways should be allowed for anyone who captures them and those who capture them should be allowed to send airway signals to anyone else however they can send them. In effect, the FCC has constructed this monopoly to marginalize anyone not a cable company. Internet distributors of broadcast signals should be allowed without restriction. If you believe in unbundling the monopoly powers given to cable companies, then let us have deregulated broadcast TV and let the market determine people's decisions, not cable tv companies.
