Dear FCC,

My name is Francisco Zapata and I live in Houston, TX.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

The internet has many and endless possibilities for creative minds to express but also to being able to continue sharing innovations that people try to get a hold of but have no possibility of gaining access.

Sincerely,

Francisco Zapata
