Dear FCC,

My name is William and I live in portland, OR.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I want to be able to update my own wireless software?not rely on slow manufacturers shipping updates.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

I think that the internet should be a free open world for users to speak their mind and it should stay that way. I don't want to pay for already free internet services, that would be insane. I know a lot of people depend on free third party software to learn and teach. Do not take away this great invention. A lot of people and I will be furious if you think it is ok to take away our freedom.

Sincerely,

William
