Dear FCC,

My name is Joshua Reagan Siegfried and I live in Manitowoc, WI.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would keep me from using my custom wireless configuration.

The internet is the epitome of free speech, and to limit users' access to the size of their wallet is exactly the same as the classist society we used to live in where only land owners had any form of power, but now it's not just power that's diminished by a lack of monetary resources, but the right to freedom of speech and opinion? How can one even put a price on someone else's opinion?

I think that the worst crime of all, is to censor the opinion of anyone, no matter how controversial or ridiculous it seems, because I understand that I would be furious if someone denied me my own right to my opinion.

Now I know that there's a worse crime than simply denying someone the right to their opinion and free speech; denying the right to your opinion and free speech unless you can afford it.

Sincerely,

Joshua Reagan Siegfried
