Dear FCC,

My name is Julio Francisco Arguello and I live in Winston Salem, NC.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

Net neutrality is one of the most important things in my life. In a world where everything is commoditized and I can't get any information without giving something, the internet is the last place I can use to learn new skills for free. Over the past month I've used it to learn barista skills. Look up new books and research my local area (I lead segway tours). It's hard enough doing this normally, but with closed systems such as you're trying to introduce, it would be literally impossible for me to do. The fantastically informative YouTube channels (China uncensored) have made me more knowledgeable about the surrounding world, and I can better understand the things I need to know to help me and my community evolve into better places. And it's bad enough I can't find content now the way it is, I couldn't find it with you bartering away my freedom. In short if you mess with my internet I will March my ass all the way to your stupid door and yell at you like an idiot all day long that you may understand my pain and suffering. I love my internet. And I will fight for it.

Sincerely,

Julio Francisco Arguello
