Dear FCC,

My name is Gabriel Menchaca and I live in Buhler , KS.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

I feel like, without an open based wireless connection the humanity and free thinking of individuals will be limited. For example, if sites that promote charities and fundraisers were blocked out then those organizations wouldn't be able to promote and get to the individuals that support their efforts for a better tomorrow. Furthermore, if we were to be charged for exploring the vast and never ending wireless world which is the Internet then we would be limited to the thoughts and ideas of organizations that might not have the same ideas or views of the individual exploring. With this we would lose our free thought and become drones of pre-approved sites supported by corporate chairman's.

Sincerely,

Gabriel Menchaca
