Dear FCC,

My name is Zachary Kennow and I live in Racine, WI.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I want to be able to update my own wireless software?not rely on slow manufacturers shipping updates.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would keep me from using my custom wireless configuration.

The Internet is the last frontier. It's a free place, where anyone with an opinion can go to share it. It allows sharing information with people all over the planet, it lets people learn new things every day, and it provides a "free market" type of environment where facts and true information can rise to the top because countless documents, articles, and research comes together to rid falsehoods and promote the truth. To try and control these things would give power to a few people and allow them to control what is the truth and what is not.

Sincerely,

Zachary Kennow
