Dear FCC,

My name is Daniel Krasnow and I live in San Diego, CA.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

Open source software enables anyone to provide communication, regardless of their intentions. Given that there will be people with bad intentions, or even illegal actions on the internet, but if the opportunity to do so is taken away, that will limit the much more predominantly good actions, and take away our freedom of speech. Don't limit communication, it will be society's demise.

Sincerely,

Daniel Krasnow
