Dear FCC,

My name is Christopher Renna and I live in Bronx, NY.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

The open nature of the internet promotes unbiased, open access to information. it gives equal opportunity to those willing to invest their time and effort into something they love. I would have never learned programming, physics, science and a shit ton more if my internet access worked anything like my cable box. The internet is the truest triumph for democracy and to tamper with that freedom for monetary gain is not american!

Sincerely,

Christopher Renna
