Dear FCC,

My name is Nathan Witt and I live in Minneola , TX.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I don't want to see community innovations, such as mesh networking, get cut off.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would keep me from using my custom wireless configuration.

As a young adult preparing to live a prosperous life and care for a family in the world you're creating, I would personally like to say that if we lose the freedoms of having a fair access to internet users, our nation loses the unwritten rule that anyone, no matter the background, can become a sensation. I currently have set up a blog, in hopes to get recognition for my writing. Losing net neutrality, means that I lose major opportunities to have a successful future. The Internet has always been the place that anything becomes possible, don't ruin that. The decision you make now, is the decision I have to live with as an adult.

Sincerely,

Nathan Witt
