Dear FCC,

My name is April and I live in Kansas City, MO.

The principles of user choice and control are vitally important for a vibrant wireless ecosystem. But as written, the NPRM threatens to undermine these ideals by limiting what users can do with their devices. That's a concern, because I want to be able to update my own wireless software?not rely on slow manufacturers shipping updates.

The draft rules could enable device manufacturers to forbid third-party software, which would make me feel less safe about the wireless networks I use and operate.

It wouldn't make me feel safe one bit. What's going to happen if my power decides to go out one day and I have to rely on my device to tell me the weather and I couldn't get onto that website? We need to just leave things as they are!

Sincerely,

April
