

60001427492.txt

Chairman Wheeler,

The internet has contributed massively to the spread of information, both science and current events. It is the Gutenberg Press of our era. Now used in business, politics, family interactions, education, health care, government and even more ways. Interfering with this incredibly helpful tool, now or as new developments are available, can hold us back in areas we desperately need to advance - particularly climate change.

I'm writing to urge you to restore broadband competition by fixing the broken market for high-capacity broadband lines. The FCC must address anti-competitive behavior in this market to reach its goal of delivering better, faster, cheaper broadband to all Americans. The future of our information economy depends on it. Virginia Cotts BSN