In response to Revitalization of the AM Service: Radio stations such as WBT-AM in Charlotte and others also with 50,000 watts that have been around since the early 1920s have earned a strong, clear channel signal that should be left intact. The small AMs may obtain translator FM status, HD status on FM or AM or low-power AM on some channels. But the long-established AMs must maintain clear-channel status. My wife and I, and many other long-time radio listeners, love listening to distant AM at night. But there is provision for smaller stations, just keep them off the channels of legacy AM stations.
