

60001535591.txt

Frequently warnings will flash across the TV screen notifying me with a loud alarm sound. If my sight wife or a friend isn't around, I must go to WLDS to see what is going on. This proved especially useful during the recent election night coverage. If there was not voting going on. Those of us who are visually impaired would have had to check with neighbors or just hope for the best regarding weather changes. Not every one has a weather radio.

The radio plays a major part in the lives of disabled individuals when it comes to keeping current with the status of local events and emergencies.

I am looking forward to extending WLDS broadcasting hours.