I and my wife watch RFDTV on DirecTV. We especially enjoy the all the shows representing farming and tractors. Too many people think that the produce and meats in the grocery stores come from the supermarket already wrapped in plastic. Watching how cheeses are made. How grain is turn into pasta. The cooking shows are great. Care for horses, cows, goats, sheep, pigs, chickens, ducks, and geese. It is especially interesting when they have urban or micro farming. We sometimes are able to contribute information that we have gleaned from RFDTV with our daughter and son-in-law, who have a small farm. It would be a shame if this valuable programing was lost. I fully support RFDTV.
