

Dear FCC,

I strongly oppose the creation of a two-tiered internet. An Internet in which some websites can pay for faster speed of access and downloading does not benefit the public and would reduce the worth of internet access as a whole. Furthermore, I support additional measures to reduce local monopolies of broadband services as inflated prices and little to no local competition between major internet providers reduce public access to the Internet, arguably the most important communication venue in the modern world.

Sincerely,

Erin Calfee
