I watch RFD-TV on DirecTV, channel 345. In a society that supports diversity, the FCC should encourage and support an independent broadcasting service that provides programming to those interested in a rural lifestyle. Offering agriculture and ranching news, education and entertainment that speaks to viewers with rural interests -- there is no other station that targets this audience in this way. For those of us who prefer moonlight to streetlights... no matter where we live... RFD-TV offers an alternative to mainstream network television that would be sorely missed should they not remain on the air.
