I watch RFD-TV on DirecTV satellite in my rural area. Not only do my husband and I watch for information regarding farming in general, we watch to gain perspective on agricultural issues in Iowa where we will be relocating to. There are few or no programs available for those who have the privilege of working the land and providing our nation with quality food to share knowledge. However, there are innumerable programs that sell consumer goods, sporting programs, sit coms, and more. There is nothing wrong with those types of programs, but they have a prolific presence in television line up. One channel dedicated to farming and land stewardship is responsible and necessary for shared knowledge that benefits us all.
