

60001568873.txt

I believe that net neutrality is one of the most important topics in today's world. Others may say it world hunger, or poverty, or terrorism, or any number of other global issues. The internet make it possible for use to develop solutions to those problems so fixing on will help fix the others. I hate that I have to purchase my internet along with phone and cable when I only use one third of these services. It frustrates me that in a country that prides itself on capitalism it has become so difficult for even the largest cooperation (Google) to enter the ISP market. All I want is fast data transfer at a reasonable price point without the need for bundled services that go unused. I want transparency about the speed I'm paying for and the speed I'm getting. I want accountability for ISPs in the form of competition. Give me the option to change ISP. Make it illegal for a single ISP to own a neighborhood or town or State.