I watch RFD-TV on Dish. I feel that RFD-TV is an important resource for both urban and rural dwellers. Urban society is further and further removed from the sources of their food and clothing. We all eat, and we all wear clothes made from cotton or wool. By seeing what's involved in feeding and clothing America, our citizenry should begin to understand why it is important to support America's farmers. This is a mission that RFD-TV does extremely well. This channel needs to be retained on their current cable and satellite systems. In addition, systems that don't carry RFD-TV (i.e. Comcast) should be strongly encouraged to do so. Without understanding America's farmers, we lose both the farmer and the farmland that they till. Without farmers, we don't eat.
