I am against any unreasonable restrictions on inmate cell phone use. I would prefer that manufacturers be allowed to provide a special restrictive cell phone (such as one with no internet service and whose communication can be monitored for abusive use). Inmates and or their families can buy the phones and pay for the monitoring requirements. I have been put in jail several times without just cause and have wished I had unrestricted ability to call for help. Where the services are expensive, inmates should be allowed to pool their resources to obtain the services. Imagine not being able to call even the administrative offices when you are abused in the prison system. I do not consider myself a criminal of any sort but have still ended up in prison several times due to misconduct within the law enforcement and justice systems.
