I am an active and avid CW operator. I enjoy and appreciate the privilege. I do not support the removal of band allocations that exist currently and which are set aside specifically for CW operations. Further the United States is not the only country which has operators using the band allocations as they are for CW operations. Occasional modifications to the standing band allocations are sometimes necessary, however it would be a huge loss to the amateur community worldwide should a change like this be pursued. The use of CW and Morse code to communicate is still and probably always will be a main staple of amateur radio communications. As an amateur radio operator in the United States who appreciates and respects the privilege of my license I openly state that I would disagree a change like that proposed here.
