Dear Chairman Wheeler,

Your so-called Internet privacy rules, which give a free pass to the Obama Administration's biggest corporate supporter -- Google -- are a sham and an outrage.

Google does more to stalk me than any company in the history of civilization. Google's Chairman even admits how little he cares about my online privacy:

And just as your net neutrality rules exempt President Obama's multi-billion dollar corporate cronies from having to follow them, your new privacy rules have a Google-sized special interest carve-out, again.

It's government actions like this that enrages the rest of us!
