Dear Chairman Wheeler,

Your Internet privacy rules give a free pass to the Obama Administration's biggest corporate supporter -- Google.

Google does more to stalk me than any company in the history of civilization. Google's Chairman even admits how little he cares about my online privacy:

"I don't believe society understands what happens when everything is available, knowable and recorded by everyone all the time."

And just as your net neutrality rules exempt President Obama's multi-billion dollar corporate cronies from having to follow them, your new privacy rules have a Google-sized special interest carve-out, again.

It's government actions like this; making rules to enrich Obama's friends at the expense of the rest of us, that enrages Americans.

What ever happened to following the pledge of allegiance -- "with liberty and justice for all"?
