Almost everyone who pays for cable TV rents a set-top box from their cable company to watch the content they've paid for. This is a great deal for the cable companies, which rake in $20 billion in annual revenues from these rentals. But these rentals cost the average household hundreds of dollars a year. Those set-top boxes control the programming that comes into our homes and creates a system where cable companies shut out competition. And it stops new programming and channels made and owned by people of color from reaching a wider audience. We urge you to pass this proposal which would lower our cable bills and create more diverse options for what we can see on TV.
