APPENDIX D

Case Studies

1. The case studies below are part of our Section 109 analysis. The record of this proceeding identified specific counties where commenters indicated a limited ability to receive in-state programming. In addition, we have independently identified counties located in a state other than the dominate state (or states) of the county's DMA that we determined would be appropriate for further study. Herein, we provide an in-depth analysis of the extent to which consumers in these specific geographic areas have access to out-of-market programming via over the air reception, cable systems, and DBS operators.

2. Employing the database that we constructed to analyze the level of access to out-of-market signals received over the air, discussed above, we used the Longley-Rice methodology to determine the out-of-market broadcast stations available to consumers over the air in each county studied. Thus, each case study reports the number of out-of-market stations of all types, including, full power, low power, Class A low power, and TV translators, both commercial and noncommercial, available to the populations of the respective counties examined.¹ Each case study also indicates whether the out-of-market broadcast stations available are contained on the Commission's list of significantly viewed stations for the particular county.² All of the stations listed in the case studies are identified by their station call sign, community and state of license, DMA to which they are assigned, and network affiliation, if any.

3. To describe consumers' access to out-of-market broadcast stations from cable systems, we identified the cable systems operating in the counties (or communities within those counties) in each study using the Commission's Cable Operations and Licensing System (COALS).³ Where available, we used cable operators' 2015 FCC Form 325 submissions to determine the carriage of out-of-market broadcast stations. Where cable systems in the areas included in the case studies are not included in the 2015 FCC Form 325 sample because of their small size, we used Warren Television & Cable Factbook data and individual cable system websites to gather additional information.⁴ In addition, in some counties multiple cable systems offer varying broadcast station lineups.⁵ Rather than report on each cable system

² See Significantly Viewed List, at <http://www.fcc.gov/mb/>. As described above, significantly viewed stations are available for carriage by cable and DBS operators and are treated as local stations for copyright purposes. Cable and DBS operators must obtain retransmission consent prior to carrying out-of-market significantly viewed stations. Furthermore, we note that cable or DBS MVPD carriage of a station listed as significantly viewed does not necessarily indicate that the station is being carried by the MVPD pursuant to the significantly viewed rules.

⁴ Warren Communications News, Television & Cable Factbook Online, <http://www.tvcablefactbook.com> (Warren Factbook). We were not able to locate complete information from publicly available sources for every cable system listed in COALS that was not in the 2010 FCC Form 325 sample. The data are not sufficient to allow us to determine the extent to which cable is available to specific households in any particular county or community; thus, the presence of a cable system does not necessarily mean that all households have access to the out-of-market stations offered by the included cable systems.

where this is the case, to get an understanding of whether out-of-market broadcast stations are being carried, we reviewed the available information and present an overview of the out-of-market stations that cable systems carry.

4. To describe consumers' access to out-of-market broadcast stations from DBS providers, we utilized the data collected regarding the out-of-market signals carried by either DIRECTV or DISH. Drawing on this information, each case study identifies the out-of-market broadcast stations, if any, provided as part of each DBS operator's carriage of significantly viewed, short market fill-in, and statutory copyright exempted stations.⁶ In such cases, we have assumed that such out-of-market signals carried by the DBS providers are generally available throughout the market, including in the particular county being examined.

5. The case study data provide the number of out-of-market stations that each county receives and also identify the stations that appear on the Commission's significantly viewed list for the particular county, and thus could be carried by MVPDs pursuant to that status in those particular counties. Further, the study notes whether any of the stations appearing on the significantly viewed list in the case studies are carried pursuant to the significantly viewed rules, but based on the information provided by DIRECTV and DISH, there are no stations being carried by DBS MVPDs pursuant to the significantly viewed rules in the counties selected for the case studies. Also, none of the counties in the case studies are located in a short market where one of the four major television networks is not offered on the primary stream of a local broadcast station. In the case of cable or telephone MVPDs, we are unable to determine whether the station is being carried pursuant to the significantly viewed rules based on the current data available to us. In addition, the case studies highlight the stations licensed to communities in the same state as the county examined, including stations located in the same market, to evaluate the availability of local programming as we interpret local programming to include in-state programming consistent with Congress's intent.

6. The case studies also examined and reported on any in-market stations that are licensed to the same state as the county at issue. For cable systems, we utilized the same methodology to describe consumers' access to in-market stations as we did for access to out-of-market broadcast stations. For DBS operators, we searched the channel lineups on the websites of DIRECTV and DISH for the local channels they carry in the case study counties. Even though such stations are in-market – and thus not relevant to the question of what out-of-market stations are available to the county – to the extent that they are licensed to the same state as the county being examined, these in-market and in-state stations potentially provide relevant local programming to the county, despite the fact that the county is located in a state different from the core of the DMA.⁷ Lastly, we identify the stations that appear to carry local programming relevant to the counties and the states in which they are located.⁸

7. The case studies below examine particular counties within certain DMAs and provide the following information:

⁶ The sources for information about broadcast stations' communities of license and affiliations are Nielsen, BIA/Kelsey, DISH, DIRECTV, and individual broadcast stations' websites.

⁸ We examined publically available programming information from sources including the stations' websites and programming guides for programs that appear to provide local news or public affairs content relevant to the state in which the case study county is located. We note that our ability to evaluate programming thus is limited by the amount of programming information available for each station. Thus the programming we describe is not meant to be exhaustive for each county.

1. Out-of-Market Stations Received in the County. Listed first in each of the case studies are out-of-market stations, i.e., stations that are assigned to a DMA other than the DMA to which the county being examined is assigned. Out-of-market stations have been reported regardless of whether they are located in the same state as the particular county being examined (i.e., in-state), or in a different state from the county being examined (i.e., out-of-state). The information is organized according to whether the stations are available via over the air reception, DBS, or MVPD. In addition, out-of-market stations that are on the Commission’s significantly viewed list have also been indicated.
2. In-State, In-Market Stations Received in the County. Next, the case studies list stations that are assigned to the same market as the county being examined and that are also licensed to the same state as the county. Again, the information is organized according to whether the stations are available via over the air reception, DBS, or MVPD.
3. In-State Programming Received in the County. Last, the studies attempt to provide some information about the programming that is received in the county from stations that are licensed to the same state as the relevant county. In examining the programming available from stations located in the same state as the county, examples have typically been drawn from out-of-market, in-state stations, rather than stations that are in-market and in-state.
