To help combat unwanted solicitation and robo-calls, is there a way to establish a uniform response number to automatically register a complaint for an unwanted call. It could function like *69 for callbacks. The recipient could enter, say *12, and the consumer's phone provider would automatically log the call as an unwanted complaint if the consumer was on the do not call list. A database could be aggregated, and the FCC could have massive amounts of complaint data at hand to shut down the callers, who are notorious for being scammers. The call metadata could be used to break through the ghost numbers that these criminals hide behind.
